All things considered, then, I think Barsam's "Looking at Movies" is the best all-around choice for an introduction to film text, and I highly recommend it. While the new edition has improved on this 2nd edition in some valuable ways, it has also taken a small step backward by expanding the introduction and by ditching the theory entirely.

Thankfully, 'Looking at Film: an introduction to film (Third Edition)' is a handy textbook that tackles these concepts. The first two chapters of the book looks at film on a base level such as what to look for in film when watching it on a critical level and the principles of film form, or how film is expressed.

Looking at Movies compacts an incredible amount of insightful information about the movie making process and film interpretation into a single book. It serves, both, as a valuable introduction for newcomers, as well as a knowledge booster for people who simply enjoy learning more about movies.

Chapter 1 - Looking at Movies p.7 - Recognizing a spectator's tendency (especially when sitting in a dark theatre, staring at a large screen) to identify subconsciously with the camera's viewpoint, early film-making pioneers created a film grammar (or cinematic language) that draws upon the way we automatically interpret visual information in our real lives, thus allowing audiences to absorb movie meaning intuitively... and instantly.
